investigation of the antimicrobial effects of a powder-based mouthrinse against Actinomyces viscosus. The aim of the present study was to investigate the in vitro antimicrobial activity of a powder-based mouthrinse. The study design used an antibacterial susceptibility assay, using agar-based and broth-based techniques. The agar-based method was used to assess the susceptibility to the mouthrinse of freshly isolated and stabilised Actinomyces viscosus by recording the number of colonies obtained after 24, 48 and 72 h of sub-culture. The broth-based method assessed the susceptibility of A. viscosus to the mouthrinse at concentrations of 0.6%, 0.9% and 1.2% (w/w). This was performed using a range of breakpoints designed to reflect the clinical situation. Data were analysed using the Student's t-test. The results demonstrate that the mouthrinse has excellent bactericidal activity against A. viscosus, both for freshly isolated (P Gurkhas: The silent charge for the world's fastest men By Yumna Rashid BBC News, Delhi Published duration 18 September 2014 Gurkhas (pronounced "guh-KOW-chees") are the only people in the world who get asked to be faster, stronger, smarter than everyone else. The split application lets you split files up and join the split files to form the original file. Sometimes, when transferring files over a network, you are given a limited amount of space and cannot split the file into several files for storage. With the split application, you can split a large file into smaller files, depending on the input, and then combine them back into a single file. In addition, this application also allows you to split a file by file size, so that the file is split into smaller or larger sub files to achieve different output size. The app also allows you to join files, so that you can transform several small files into a single larger file. For example, you can take several text files and combine them to form a single text document. The app works with the file extension to see if a file is a valid file or not, so you don't have to worry that you will run out of space to store the output file. * Split file size is unlimited. * The split time is 3-5 minutes. * The split file size is from 1MB to 100GB. * The split file size may be up to 9PB. * If you want to split a very large file, please set minimum output size parameter and split size parameters. * The split output file is stored in the same directory as the original file. * If you don't specify output directory, the split file will be stored in the same directory as the original file. * It will result in a total loss of original file if you do not specify the output directory. * If there is any file name of the same file in the output directory, it will be excluded to make sure the file(s) can not be overwritten. * There is not space limitation for the output directory. * It takes 10 minutes to reach peak output. * It takes 3-5 minutes to start splitting the input file. * It is possible to use a network connection to split a large file. * It is possible to split input file by file size. * It is possible to split file by multi-threading, so that you can easily split a file to be split again and again. * It is possible to use a network connection to split a large file. * You can split and join a text file, a table, a markdown file, a blogger.xml file, an MSWord, a XML
